shared electric autonomy

“I feel very confident predicting autonomous robotaxis for Tesla next year,” Musk said during Tesla’s Autonomy Day in Palo Alto, California on Monday. “Not in all jurisdictions because we won’t have regulatory approval everywhere, but I’m confident we will have ... regulatory approval somewhere, literally next year.”

Musk predicted 1 million Teslas could have fully autonomous capabilities in 2020, though admitted he is often fairly criticized for being a little off on timing.

“Sometimes I’m not on time,” he said, laughing. “But, I get it done.”

European Commission - Fact Sheet

Questions & Answers: EU negotiators reach a breakthrough to modernise copyright rules

Strasbourg, 13 February 2019

What is the new Copyright Directive about?

The European Parliament, the Council of the EU and the European Commission reached a political agreement on a new Copyright Directive that will require final approval by both Institutions in the coming weeks.

Digital technologies have transformed the way creative content is produced, distributed and accessed. The new Directive brings the copyright rules up to date with those changes and the way users access content online. For example, copyright exceptions exist in the areas of education, research and preservation of cultural heritage, but the digital uses were not anticipated by the existing rules, which date back to 2001. Therefore, this limits the possibilities for users (e.g. educational establishments, research institutions, libraries) to benefit from the potential of new technologies. In addition, the current EU copyright framework does not address the problems emerged in the recent years in relation to the distribution of value in the online environment.

The Directive wants to create a comprehensive framework where copyrighted material, copyright holders, publishers, providers and users can all benefit from clearer rules, adapted to the digital era.

In order to achieve this goal, the Copyright Directive focuses on three main objectives:

- Wider opportunities to use copyrighted material for education, research and preservation of cultural heritage: the exceptions allowing these uses have been modernised and adapted to the technological changes, to allow uses online and across borders.
More cross-border and online access for citizens to copyright-protected content: The Directive will contribute to increase the availability of audiovisual works on video-on-demand platforms, facilitate the digitalisation and dissemination of works that are out-of-commerce and able to disseminate online with full legal certainty copies of works of art that are in the public domain.
